Description

An exceedingly high quality Edinburgh made longcase clock by a well known maker. It is of typical early 19th Century Scottish design and has a break arch top hood with a central cresting and brass finial. The trunk has a figured door and reeded side columns, and a figured panel base. The circular dial is signed by the maker, James Whitelaw of Edinburgh. The well engineered 8 day movement has shaped plates and strike the hours on a bell. James Whitelaw is listed as a maker born in 1776 and died in 1846.
